Stephanie Singer believes that Philadelphia's election system is broken, costs too much and leaves voters feeling as if their votes don't count. As City Commissioner, she will make sure elections control politicians, instead of politicians controlling elections.

Proven Experience

As City Commissioner, Stephanie will:

Take the politics out of elections:

As City Commissioner, Stephanie will take the politics out of our elections by working to eliminate elected City Commissioners. Non-partisan professionals should run our elections for transparent and cost-effective results.

Modernize elections:

As City Commissioner, Stephanie will bring 21st century technology and communications to an office that is badly out of date, providing website access to election results, moving the office to digital record keeping, and updating the availability of information about candidates, polling locations and ballot questions.

Educate and energize voters:

As City Commissioner, Stephanie will work with City departments and other Philadelphia institutions to promote voter registration and to educate voters about upcoming elections. She is committed to making voting as much a piece of our identity as cheesesteaks and rooting for the Phillies.
